

christine tricarico lives in Michigan with her daughter, Fallon, their puppy, Oden, bunny, Niner, and two kittens. When Christine's not busy creating whimsical stories, she can be found evoking laughter among the elderly at her day job as a gerontology assistant. She's been known to dance with her dogs, bunny hop through her gardens, and cook up a kickin' kitchen salsa! Visit Christine online at christinetricarico.com.

Rich Deas is a designer, illustrator, and currently a creative director for a children's book publisher. At a young age, he used to watch his father draw character sketches and images of childhood heroes. Emulating his dad, Rich began doodling and then honed his skills at Loyola University in New Orleans. He resides in Glen Ridge, NJ, with his wife and two sons, and is happy to report that he is continuing to do what he loves: create.

In rootin', tootin' Texas is a gloomy, grouchy farm where animals work overtime and life has lost its charm.

But when Rooster gets a jitterbug, all the animals catch boogie fever and can't stop dancing! Pigs polka. Sheep shimmy and swing. Chickens cha-cha. What will Rooster cock-a-doodle do to stop the barnyard bash?

From the fine-feathered team of Christine Tricarico and Rich Deas comes a rollicking read-aloud, where—from the henhouse to the pigpen—there's a whole lotta shakin' goin' on!
